December 15, 2021

Dear Tereza Van Horn:

My children and I left Florida in March of 2000 in the middle of the night, in order to escape an abusive marriage. We returned to New York City, where I was raised, to start a new life. My family members had since relocated to other parts of the country and we had no where to stay. I found temporary shelter at the New York City domestic violence shelter.

The case worker assigned to me was very helpful in securing us temporary and then permanent residence in New York City housing apartments. He also provided financial assistance through the New York City financial assistance system. I was very grateful for what I thought was honest assistance.

On several occasions, my caseworker stated that he over paid me with the financial assistance he was providing and requested that I return some of the funds. I eventually became aware that this practice was illegal. I did continue to accept payments for a short time after. I later found out that this caseworker used my desperation, as well as the desperation of the other abused women, to get us to participate in this practice.

When this fraudulent practice was discovered, I and four other women unbeknownst to me were implicated in an investigation for having received excessive funds. Through our cooperation, the authorities were able to convict our caseworker. However, we were also convicted of Petit Larceny, and I received 12 days community service. This event happened in 2000, the case was finalized in 2005.

I received a Writ of Civil Disability.

Thank you,

DeShawn Wilson
